A NOTE

Hospitalization and recovery at home provide wonderful opportunities to catch up with one's reading. I especially enjoyed Rich Bottles Jr.'s "Encased in Celluloid Buttons," which appeared in Numismatist in October, 2007. Mr. Bottles describes the Baltimore Badge & Novelty Company adapting its celluloid buttons to hold Indian Head cents as "lucky coins." He especially focuses on Western Pennsylvania issuers and talks about individuals, businesses and locations. This, of course, is what makes tokens inherently interesting - the link to actual people and locations. I enjoyed reading about the individuals but toward the end of the section came across the product of a small time jeweler, Lewis J. Seleznick. It turns out that he drops an "e" to become "Selznick," becomes fascinated with a nearby nickelodeon and goes into business with another Pittsburgh merchant, Harry Warner. They formed the World Film Corporation in 1915. Where? Fort Lee, New Jersey, "considered America's first movie capital." See, I got Jersey into it! Ultimately, weather becoming a determining factor - Hollywood!

Back in issue 117, I showed a Hard Rubber token from the Murphy Varnish Co., Newark, N.J. that sold for about $160. on ebay. I didn't put 2&2 together until I saw the above Pin-Back Button (made by Whitehead & Hoag) and the Ad below. Murphy's father owned the company. However, it was Franklin, with one half interest in the company, who improved the recipe for the Varnish that made him a wealthy man. Franklin was a Republican and defeated James Seymour in 1901 to become a N.J. governor. gp

Transparent Wood Finish, $3.00, is The Finest House Varnish ever made---and the cheapest.

Why and How it is Cheap It flows on easily and smoothly, with uniform thickness, leaving no ridges or lumps to sand-paper off; and no bare streaks to varnish over and over. It covers enough more surface, with enough less work, to make it cost less by the job than any varnish at $2.50 or $2.00.

Note of the Orange Branch 125 of the Labor Exchange (enlarged 1.3x)
Valued at One-Tenth of a Unit of Labor

Exonomia from Your Neighborhood

SCRIP OF AN 1890s UTOPIAN MOVEMENT

David D. Gladfelter, NLG

The so-called “gay nineties” was actually a period of economic hard times for American farmers and industrial workers. Employment shrank and credit became tight. Many turned to cooperative ventures as a way to make ends meet. They believed that through collective ownership and control, they could earn their living without having to rely on employers, financiers and middlemen to provide them with work. Mutual benefit, rather than profit, was to be the goal of the cooperative movement.

To pursue this goal, a Missouri farmer, Giovanni B. DeBernardi (1831-1901), organized the Labor Exchange in 1889 at Independence. DeBernardi, born in Italy, had lost most of his farm to foreclosure during the Panic of 1873. Through lectures, promotional tracts and publication of a newspaper, DeBernardi drew a respectable number of adherents to his organization. By 1896 it had an estimated 6,000 members in 135 chartered branches throughout 32 states. It ultimately grew to more than 15,000 members in 311 branches, including one in Toronto, then declined and went out of existence after the turn of the century. (In Freedom, Kansas, an actual socialist colony based on DeBernardi's principles was organized on 160 acres of farmland, but this colony was not formally associated with the Labor Exchange.)

According to Gordon S. Watkins, a labor economist, this is how the exchange system worked:

Members of the association were privileged to bring to the exchange any commodity they desired, and to receive payment in the form of a labor check for an equivalent value in the local wholesale market, where goods would be purchased at retail prices. Nonmembers could trade at the exchange either by use of labor checks or legal money.

The check illustrated is good for one-tenth of a "unit" of labor. In his studies, Steve Whitfield says that a "unit" was worth a day's labor and that the checks were issued in denominations of 1/100, 1/20, 1/10, 1/4, 1/2, 1, 2, 5, 10 and 20 "units". Presumably that meant that, say, a carpenter member who spent a day making a cabinet would receive a 1-unit check for bringing the cabinet to the exchange, and could either hold the check as money or spend it by taking out commodities on which other members had worked an equivalent amount of time to produce. There may even have been a "shop book" for setting standard values for the commodities, but this is not known.

New Jersey had four Labor Exchange branches that are known to have issued checks: Branch 121 in Paterson, Branch 125 in Orange, Branch 159 in Trenton (Wait ##2317-2320 inclusive, 2320 is illustrated) and Branch 195 in Phillipsburg. The dates are 1896 and 1897; the designs are slightly different for the two dates, but both designs have interesting, if quaint, political slogans. All checks seen have a perforated edge at the left, suggesting that they may have been issued in books like coupons or tickets. They are on standard lithographed forms, with faces in brown and backs in green. The individual branch numbers, cities and dates of issue are overprinted in red.

Although the particular note illustrated above is unlisted in Wait, it has an impeccable New Jersey provenance. It once belonged to Charlie Nettleship, one of the founders of the New Jersey Numismatic Society. He had acquired it in 1938 from William T. Dolley, briefly a fellow NJNS member. In 1979 Nettleship sent it to Morristown Sunday Record columnist Harold Flartey along with Dolley's published inquiry to the editor of the old Newark Sunday Call. The editor said: "We fail to identify it. Can someone help?" Jerseyana to the rescue!

Now THAT's New Jersey Exonumia

Pete Wacker

Missed getting your share of the Atocha's cargo? January 20th's Star Ledger carried a most interesting article concerning silver bars lost in the, of all places, Arthur Kill! In 1903 a barge holding nearly 8,000 silver bars listed and sank north of the present Outerbridge Crossing. Most of these bars were recovered but it is estimated that there are still 1,400 laying in the Arthur Kill. The silver was owned by the Guggenheims and are believed worth $6,000-$7,000 each. The paper gave no description of the bars but I imagine that, as today, there would be some identifier as to origin. And, no doubt, it is Jersey Stuff! Refined here from silver ore from the Guggenheims' holdings in South America. Aqua Survey, Inc., of Kingwood, N.J., using sophisticated equipment, is attempting to find the bars. One added note - Outerbridge CROSSING because it is named after a guy with the surname Outerbridge.
